Cookie Cutters ads recruiting franchise owners

01 — THE FRANCHISE BUYER

The cheapest channel for selling franchises is nearly empty, and your competitor is the only one standing in it.

Of the 20 brands your candidates cross-shop you against, 18 run no ownership ads at all. Sharkey's launched three more the week we pulled this.

02 — THE PARENT

You built the experience. Sharkey's is the one advertising it.

88% of Sharkey's consumer ads lead with the in-store experience. Yours do it in 2% — 87% are a generic "book now." And your 35 owner-run accounts advertise 7 different prices for the same haircut.

03 — WHAT YOU ALREADY OWN

Your three strongest assets have never appeared in a single ad.

The membership — your own pilot shows 83% more visits per member, live in 15 stores. Snip-its — 159 locations, the largest children's salon platform in the country. And the lowest entry cost in the category. Each ran in 0 of your 272 ads.

WHERE YOU ARE ALREADY WINNING

First haircut and the keepsake. You run it in 29% of your ads. Sharkey's is at 2%, Pigtails at 4%. You own the most emotional moment in the category outright.

The detail behind each number.

Nothing here changes the story on page one — it is here so you can check our work. Every Meta ad in the category from August 2025 to July 2026, classified one at a time: Cookie Cutters, Sharkey's, Pigtales & Crewcuts, Snip-its, and the twenty concepts a franchise candidate shops you against.

FRANCHISE RECRUITMENT — THE CHANNEL

Sharkey's franchise-recruitment ads, 12 months	82
Cookie Cutters franchise-recruitment ads	0
Cross-shopped brands running any ownership ad	2 of 20
Cookie Cutters ads from a corporate page	0 of 272

Sharkey's angles: absentee ownership, "40 new locations in the next 12 months," "approaching 300 locations," and a founder origin story. Three of the 82 launched July 26–27, two days before this review was written. Every Cookie Cutters ad in the system comes from a franchisee's own page, so there is no brand-level voice in the channel at all.

CONSUMER ADVERTISING — WHAT EACH BRAND SAYS

Sharkey's ads leading with the in-store experience	88%
Cookie Cutters ads doing the same	2%
Cookie Cutters ads that are a generic "book now"	87%
Cookie Cutters ads using a customer review	2 of 272
Distinct price points advertised by your 35 owners	7
First-haircut ads — you vs Sharkey's vs Pigtales	29% / 2% / 4%

Your stores have the same TVs, the same cars to sit in, the same play areas Sharkey's builds its advertising around. A parent who drives past two of your locations can see two different prices for the same haircut.

THE THREE ASSETS THAT NEVER RAN

Membership — 83% more visits per member, live in 15 stores	0 of 272
Snip-its — 159 locations, your own press release, nine months ago	0 of 272
Lowest entry cost — below every direct competitor, declining multi-unit ladder	0 of 272

The membership is the direct answer to the visit-frequency drop — it buys the visit back instead of discounting it. Snip-its outranks anything Sharkey's can claim about scale.

WHAT IS ALREADY WRITTEN

Thirty specific ads, each named and reasoned: ten franchise-recruitment statics, two aimed at the roughly 80 existing owners who are your cheapest next franchise sale, six consumer, two hiring, and ten videos — all producible from assets you already have or a single half-day shoot. The first is the counter-punch to "approaching 300": America's largest children's salon platform.

What we can and cannot see. Meta's public Ad Library shows every ad, its copy and its launch date — but not spend, impressions or cost per result. Every claim here about what an ad says is fact and traces to a Meta Library ID; nothing here claims to know what performed. No earnings claim appears anywhere — we could not verify one against a primary registry filing, and we will not put a number in front of you we cannot source. Thirty minutes of reporting access inside your own ad accounts turns all of this into a ranked list by real cost per booking.
